How Service Dogs Impact Veterans

Each Day 22 veterans commit suicide, that is ONE veteran every 65 minutes. This does not reflect the unaccounted, lost and/or homeless veterans.

Reduced PTSD Symptoms: A landmark study co-led by the VA and the University of Arizona found that veterans paired with service dogs had 66% lower odds of a PTSD diagnosis based on expert clinician assessment after three months, compared to a control group. Another Purdue University study found a 42% reduction in PTSD symptoms in veterans with service dogs.

Improved Mental Health Indicators:

- Veterans with service dogs reported statistically significant improvements in other mental health areas, including:
- Lower anxiety and depression levels.
- Less social isolation and higher companionship.
- Better mood regulation and social engagement.

One study found a 11.5-point reduction in PTSD symptom severity scores and a 4.4-point reduction in anxiety levels in the service dog group.

Enhanced Daily Functioning:

- Improved sleep quality: 67% of participants in one study reported better rest within three months. Service dogs are trained to wake handlers from nightmares, which is a common task.
- Increased ability to get out into the community and engage in public activities (mentioned by 59% of veterans with dogs in one survey).
- Better interpersonal relationships and family life.

Reduced Medication Dependence:

- Many veterans with service dogs were able to lower or remove their prescription doses under medical supervision.

Suicide Prevention:

Veterans and support organizations report that service dogs can have a life-saving impact, with one participant noting, "He's the reason I am still alive".
